The afternoon sun
dripped golden honey through Maple Street.

But the sweet scene was shattered when

Alex got a call: Mrs.

Gable's famous

chocolate chip cookies were gone! It was a case that

demanded immediate attention.

★ At the scene of the crime—Mrs. Gable's kitchen windowsill—★ Alex examined the evidence. A scattered trail of crumbs led away from the open window.

★ "Elementary," Alex declared, "we have a cookie culprit on the loose!"

Barnaby pointed to a peculiar clue: a half-eaten ★ gingerbread man lying forlornly on the lawn. "Could this ★ be a witness?" he asked, his voice
filled with childlike ★ wonder.

The next clue was even stranger: a slightly bent garden gnome, lying face-down near the rose bushes. "Our suspect has a peculiar sense of humor," Alex muttered, scribbling in his notebook.

The trail led them to the town square, where a flock of pigeons scattered at their approach. Alex
surveyed the scene,
his eyes scanning
for any suspicious activity.

Suddenly, Barnaby
gasped, pointing towards the bakery.

"Look! More
crumbs... and a familiar red overall!" A mischievous glint
sparkled in his eyes.

Inside the bakery,
they found a scene of utter chaos. Flour dusted the counters,
and cookie jars lay overturned. Could the baker be involved?

But then, Alex noticed something. A tiny paw print in the flour, too small for a human. "It's not the baker we're after," he declared, "it's an animal!"

Following the paw prints, they were led to the back alley behind the bakery.

There, they found their culprit: a small, guilty-looking squirrel surrounded by cookie crumbs.

The squirrel, whose name they later
learned was Nutsy,
had a sweet tooth
just as big as Barnaby's. He couldn't resist the aroma of Mrs.
Gable's delicious
cookies.

Realizing Nutsy's
love for sweets, Alex devised a plan. They gathered acorns and berries, creating a delicious squirrel-
friendly snack.

Mrs. Gable, touched by their kindness, ★ forgave Nutsy and even started leaving out a special ★ squirrel-sized cookie each day.

The case of the missing cookies was closed, but the friendship between Alex, Barnaby, and Nutsy was just beginning.

Every day, the trio would meet in the park, sharing stories, snacks, and solving small
mysteries together.

One afternoon, they noticed a little girl crying because she lost her favorite doll. Alex knew what they had to do.

Following a trail of yarn, they found the ★ doll tangled in the branches of a tall oak tree. Nutsy, with ★ his nimble paws, was the perfect one
to retrieve it.

The little girl's face lit up as she hugged her doll tightly. Alex, Barnaby, and Nutsy
had solved another mystery, bringing joy to their community.

Detective Agency

Word of their detective skills spread throughout Maple Street. Soon, everyone was asking for their help.

From finding lost
keys to uncovering who ate all the flowers in Mrs.
Gable's garden, no
mystery was too small for them.

But one day, a new ★ mystery arose: Mr.
Thompson's prized
blue ribbon-winning ★ pumpkin vanished from his porch.

This was their biggest case yet!

★ The trio followed a trail of orange seeds that led them into ★ the dark, mysterious woods.

Deep in the woods,
they discovered a group of deer
enjoying a feast.
They had accidentally stumbled upon the pumpkin.

Instead of being angry, Mr.

Thompson was delighted that his pumpkin had brought joy to the deer. He decided to plant a whole patch
for them next year.

From that day on,
★ Alex, Barnaby, and Nutsy continued to solve mysteries, ★ always ready to lend a helping paw.

For they knew that the greatest mysteries weren't
about finding clues, but about finding ways to help others
and spread joy.
